is anyone in the UK or anywhere else with such a car using something like this. I did a search for it and found nothing on TomTom. I also read a book on how to upgrade to version 9 and there it states that the TomTom 9.1 is preinstalled on the Porsche. It also states that it is a universal program. Does anyone know if TomTom updates for the Renault/Renault also come pre-installed on the device? If yes, does anyone have a UK address to which they can send me? Can anyone confirm/deny if TomTom is preinstalled on the Renaults? If the TomTom 9.1 is preinstalled on the Porsche why can it not be applied to a Renault? If you have tomtom 9.1 preinstalled on your Porsche you can either purchase a pre-paid USB key from your dealers or you can purchase the tomtom controller for your car over the internet and connect it to your car using a USB cable. Thanks for the reply, Rick. I will check back for the "Tomtom 9.1 pre-installed on the Porsche" news. As for the Porsche PDK, the link below explains that the problem you are experiencing is caused by the specific software that the carmaker has installed on the car. The guy at the auto parts store that sold me the controller stated that the problem I was experiencing was because the tomtom software that came with the system would only function properly when a USB cable was connected. He gave me a USB cable that he believed would work but unfortunately, after testing, I could not get the car to connect to the tomtom software. In regards to the Renault, if it was pre-installed on the car, I do not know how I could get it onto another car unless the car is serviced. I also read that the equipment needed to connect to the PDK is a 10.1 version of tomtom and that there are no plans to update to version 10.1 as the update requires the car to be serviced which is cost prohibitive. Also, the owner of a Holden states that it is possible to get the installation media for the 10.1 update and use that to update the PDK but the car needs to be serviced. My main concern is that it may be a problem 82157476af
